NEW Rules to Ensure That Your Retirement is SECURE?

Trending Today - 3.12.2021

The Here we go! "How much do I need to retire? How much in retirement savings should I have?" - two questions virtually all of us have asked ourselves as our non-working, non-earning years draw closer.

How much will you need to retire?

If (or perhaps we should say WHEN) the Secure Act 2.0 becomes law, many pre-retirees will have a myriad of additional new options and opportunities to save and invest for retirement, and to build and protect their net worth. And while there is no such thing as a "sure thing" in Washington D.C., the Securing a Strong Retirement Act of 2021 has bipartisan support, and was approved unanimously by the House Ways and Means Committee just over two months ago.

What is changing, and what kind of new net worth building and retirement saving options and opportunities will be available? Click the link below to watch an engaging six-minute educational video that we just recently published, featuring our President, Joseph Eschleman, jam-packed with information highlighting six MAJOR ways your retirement savings plan may change (for the better!) if the Secure Act 2.0 becomes law:

Cartoon of the Week

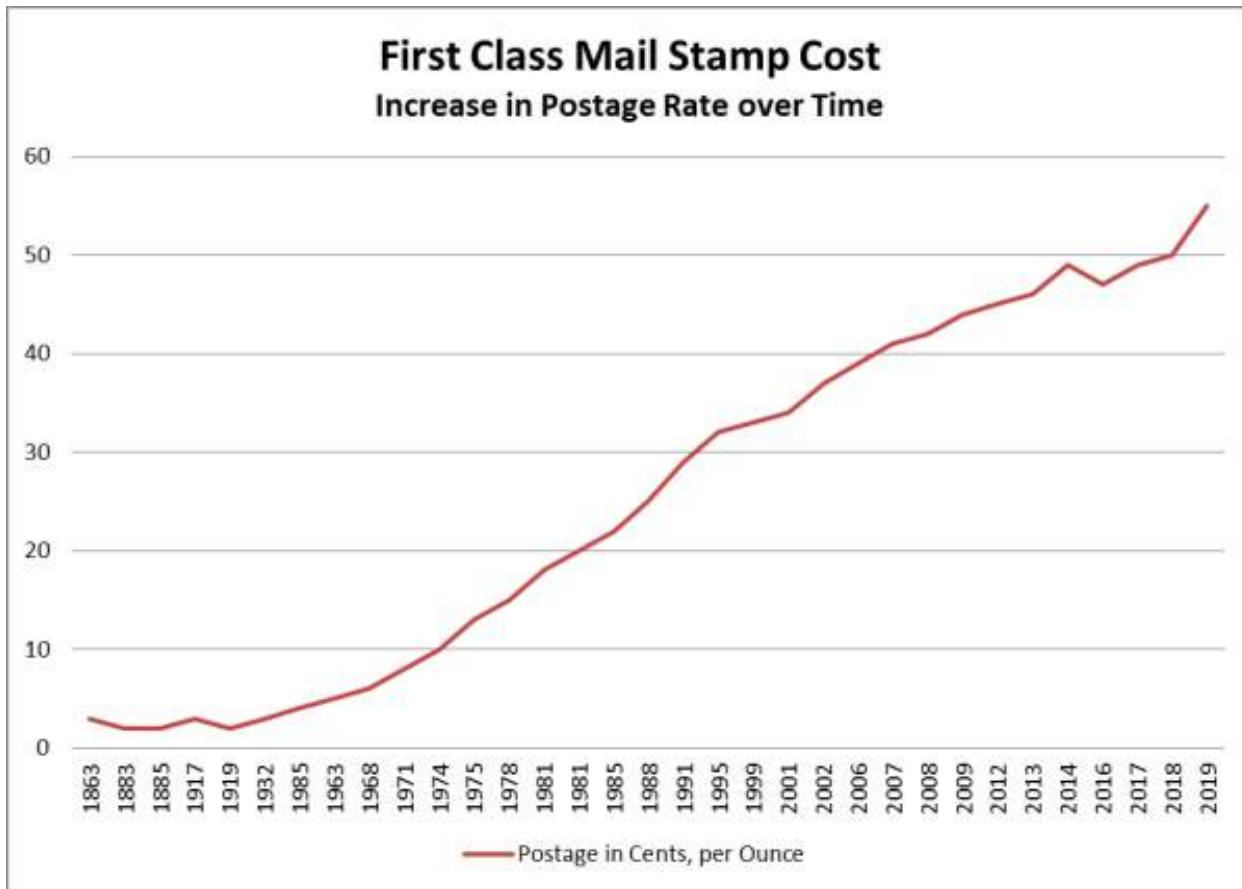

As the cartoon below illustrates, inflation is not always immediately visible, and not always "feelable" (although if you have purchased a tank of gas, a new home, or a new or used car lately, your wallet has certainly felt it!) and its insidious nature can be quite problematic when investing to grow your net worth. Trying to answer the question "How much do I need to retire?" cannot be done without considering the impact that inflation will have on the cost of your future retirement lifestyle.

At Towerpoint Wealth, we feel that avoiding risk when investing (i.e. prioritizing that your nest egg and retirement funds do not fluctuate up and down in value) by focusing on owning CDs, money market funds, and cash "safely" in the bank, is akin to letting inflation peck away and erode your net worth. We believe that "risk," in and of itself, is not a bad thing - it is one of the few variables we have direct control over. The binary question of "if" risk should be taken is inappropriate in our opinion - instead, we believe that evaluating, measuring, and justifying exactly how much and/or what level of risk should be taken is the more important consideration.

Highlighted by the deterioration in value (in REAL dollars) that "safe" investments can and oftentimes do experience due to inflation (and income taxes), it is important to understand that both "safety" and "risk" are relative terms, and to think critically about both concepts when developing, implementing, and managing a customized financial, investment, and retirement plan and strategy.

Key highlights

- It is a nutshell
- Expanding coverage and increasing retirement savings
- Preservation of income
- Simplification and clarification of certain retirement plan rules
- Tax incentives for plan participants and administrative processes
- Conclusion

In a nutshell

Members of the Ways and Means Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives, on October 27, 2020, released a proposed retirement reform bill, commonly referred to as the "SECURE Act 2.0". The proposed bill was introduced by Rep. Richard Neal (D-Mass) and Rep. Kevin Brady (R-Tex). Like that of the Setting Every Community Up for Retirement Enhancement Act of 2019 (hereinafter referred to as "SECURE Act"), this legislation continues to provide Americans with strong financial security and savings with a strong financial future.

Some of the goals of the Bill include:

- Allow people who have saved little to set more aside for their retirement
- Offer low- and moderate-income workers a tax credit for

Key highlights:

- News headlines can cause us to make irrational and emotional decisions, including ignoring the hard-wiring of the human brain.
- The average investor has underperformed the market as of late due to some changes in performance trends. Returns have been flat.

Despite the prevalence and access to investment information, individual investors still struggle to find success in the financial markets. The average investor continues to underperform based on market analysis—a trend that has been in place for many years and is likely to continue (The Motley Fool).

While there are many causes for this underperformance, frequent trading often at inappropriate times is the primary culprit. Much of this frequent trading happens as individual investors react to news headlines.
